MEMORIAL DAY.

The ancient Greek custom of bestrewn the resting places of the dead with flowers, which has been revived by the American people, with the latter is more than a ceremonial fancy or even a sentiment. It is a nation's heart offering to the memory of those who preserved its unity, and promoted its ability to become, as it is to-day, the foremost power, Republican or Monarchical, on the face of the globe. It is a tribute to the living who are enjoying the blessings purchased with the life-blood of those who fell in the civil strife, and their comrades who shared their perils and who have since departed to join their brethren across the dark river, where all is eternal rest and peace. It is not a day of mourning, but of exaltation; exaltation of a nation and the memories of those who preserved its honor, its unity and its flag, which is now not only the emblem of liberty but of supremacy upon the land and upon the sea.

As the years roll by, Memorial Day carries a more softening and solemn meaning to the heart of the nation. The bitterness engendered by a war of sections has gradually but steadily softened, until no trace of it is left, and blossoms are showered alike upon the sods over the mortal parts of those who wore the blue and those who wore the gray. The laurel and the willow are equally remembered and honored, and the living representatives of each join hands with like sincerity and zeal in honoring the memories of those who lost or perilled their lives in the cause they thought to be right.

To-day with an added tenderness the flowers will shower upon the graves of the blue and the gray. Their sons and daughters will unite in tributes to the memory of those who were gathered in the last harvest of death, who died for the honor of a united nation and for the never dying cause of human liberty, and will turn from the fresh broken sod to those that are green with the grass of more than a third of a century. The dead of the Spanish war gave their lives for the immortal spirit of liberty. The fresh made graves attest the truth of the words of the immortal Lincoln: "We know that those dead have not died in vain, and that government of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the face of the earth."

A FICTITIOUS claim was lately allowed at Washington and out of it the remaining Stewart organs have been making a tremendous blow about the industry of the "grand old man" and his attention to the interest of his constituents. They hadn't sense enough, however, to suppress Stewart's telegram which says: "The department at my request made it special." There are scores of other claims of the same character fully as meritorious as that allowed to one of Stewart's followers, which are lying buried in some pigeon hole or in the desk of some obscure clerk of the "department," and there is no evidence of any industrial attempt being made to exhume them. Why make fish of one and fowl of another? Or, in other words, why "make special" one claim and leave the others to smother in dust? In the allowance of this one claim the "department" will consider that it has done its full duty to Nevada claim holders, and will let the rest go over until they buried so deep in the dust of antiquity that future generations will require a steam shovel to disinter them.

THE question in Cuba over the disbanding of the Cuban soldiers is becoming acute. The declaration of the soldiers to give up their arms in return for the $3,000,000 and the declaration of Gomez that he would have nothing more to do with the distribution of the money, point to a good deal of trouble ahead for the government. If the administration persevere in its determination to have the arms of the Cuban soldiers, another insurrection may be precipitated. On the other hand, if it acquiesce in the demand of the soldiers to retain their arms, the chaotic conditions in the rural parts of the island will probably be intensified and indefinitely prolonged. The situation demands careful handling, or the administration may find itself with another war on its hands. A person would infer from the press dispatches that General Brooke is not the right man to handle the situation.

THE Placerville (Cal.), Democrat copies a JOURNAL article upon the Republican party's responsibility for the system of trusts, and adds the following somewhat energetic remarks:

In connection with the above editorial from the NEVADA STATE JOURNAL we venture a brief comment. Like Kansas, and going to the opposite extreme of downright idocy, the Republican party, aided by a lot of fool Democrats, "started in to raise hell and is now suffering from overproduction." And while its pet combines are combining to steal a continent, the grand old party is seven thousand miles from land, yelling at the top of its voice "stop thief."

A SPLENDID ADDRESS.

the world and give us Phariseism. We need to make one advance upon Zeno's doctrine, and to ascend beyond mere virtue to the highest type, that of character-manhood. Herbert Spencer is an impartial witness. He says: "The social mechanism rests, in the final resolve, on character." Another impartial witness as to the primacy of character is George William Curtis. In his eulogy at the memorial service of Wendell Phillips, Mr. Curtis' words are: "This memorial rite is not a tribute to official service, to literary genius, to scientific distinction; it is homage to personal character, a life of transcendent purity of purpose, devoted with absolute unselfishness." We consent unanimously that a character-manhood involving all that is in this description is the highest type. But when we ask, Whence this ideal with its absolute unselfishness? Whence the means of attaining this ideal? We are answered by history, "In Christianity." It is Christian character that demands manhood in every part, and gives motives for it. "What, know ye not that your body is the temple of the Holy Ghost?" calls for a physical beauty and strength crowned with a purity that Greece cannot equal. The exhortation of Paul, "Be in malice children, but in understanding men," in connection with the impartation of the deepest truths for study gives a character of intellect. The summary of the law and the prophets, "Love the Lord thy God, and thy neighbor as thyself," is the germ of a final code of ethics and the primal impulse for a complete character. In short, our young man, our truth seeker, is led to the religion of Christ for a sufficient example, for the means and motives of the character-manhood.

Our studies to-day have not simply a speculative purpose, but also a practical one. We may illustrate from the picture by Retzoh. A youth is playing a game of chess on a sarcophagus lid. His opponent is the dark, statue and attractive Satan. Over the shoulder of the youth peers an angel face as of his mother. The soul of the man is the king. The queen with her cross represents religion; the pawns are prayers. We are playing this very night the game of life, and upon a coffin lid. As religion in the picture bears the cross and as the argument of the discourse shows, must we not turn to that religion if we would win the game? As once from the palace of Pilate, so now to us from the palace of truth, may it not be said: "Then came Jesus forth, wearing the crown of thorns and the purple robe." Pilate of old said, not in contempt, but in pity, and with something of admiration, "Behold the man." With awe we turn to Him to whom as finger posts down the ages all religions point. To Him the inventions and ideals of modern civilization look. Our aspirations go out to Him, and alone are fully satisfied in Him. Can we do less than exclaim with the speculative, scientific poet, who represents the nineteenth century and reveals to us the truth of our age as did the prophets of old to their ages:

"Strong Son of God, immortal Love,
Whom we, that have not seen thy face,
By faith, and faith alone, embrace,
Believing where we cannot prove;

"Thou seemest human and divine,
The highest, holiest manhood, Thou;
Our wills are ours, we know not how;
Our wills are ours, to make them Thine."

Once more let us open our gift books, presents from dear ones, and, with our souls susceptible to the best as they are stirred by the sweet and solemn emotions of graduation, may we in the simple old story rationally read and "behold the man." There is the one ideal man in history, unique in the perfection of His character in that His absolute parity is without pride, and blended with a divine pity and self sacrifice.

Fellow students of the Senior class: The need of the times is men. The object of our American system is incidentally to help men to get on in the world. Our public school system is crowned with the university, to make sure a broad, well trained citizenship. But the supreme object of our system is to make full-orbed men. The new Americanism calls, not for an aristocracy, even though it means the rule of the best, for it implies a class; not for a democracy, the rule of the people as so many mere beings, or a mobocracy; but it calls, to coin a name for a new thing, for an anthropocracy, a rule of men. To be a man is to be trained, whether in the schools or out of the schools; to have developed the ideal within the human being; to have character. The greatest compliment given me was by a little golden-haired girl. She was asked by her teacher what a chancellor was, and looking toward him she answered, "He is a man." To be a man is the greatest thing, for to be a man is to have God in us as well as above and about us.

I see in you representatives of the Nevada University manly men and womanly women. The people of the State and you, their sons and daughters, are what you are because of the Emmanuel, God with us. May He be with us, the secret of the power of our manhood and womanhood in the joys and trials that await us in life and in death.

IN SOLEMN TRUST.
(Mrs. C. D. Howe.)
With martial tread and roll of drums—
Sounds once to them so dear—
With waving flags and boom of guns
And reverent steps draw near.
Strew flowers above the patriot dead,
Who for our nation's life
The richest blood of manhood shed
And fell in honest strife.
Their graves are ours, in solemn trust,
Then strew with flowers
The sacred dust.

Let Arlington smile sweet with bloom;
Let Gettysburg grow fair!
From every lonely grave perfume
Rise upward like a prayer.
While living men and soldiers true
Hold fast the trust they gave,
And do the work still left to do
With honest hearts and brave.

O? Union flag, with stars enwrought,
Float softly o'er them now.
Their latest battle bravely fought,
Won crowns for every brow.
They are not lost within the grave,
Their lives stand out sublime
In noble records, good and brave,
For all enduring time.

Our Country, by their blood set free,
Complete their work begun,
Hold fast this dear-bought liberty,
And guard the rights they won;
For every tribute that we bring,
Though steeped in tears like rain,
Were an unmeaning offering
If these have died in vain.

The above verses by Mrs. C. B. Howe of Carson have been set to music by Mrs. Dinmore of Reno and will be sung at the Memorial services today.

Bodie Stage Accident.
There was a fatal stage accident on the road between Bodie and Hawthorne last Sunday evening. About 8 o'clock P. M. a stage horse came to Summit station with part of its harness and badly bruised up. Search was made and the stage was found at the bottom of a ravine broken into pieces and the driver, John Green, and three horses dead. As there was no passengers on board it is impossible to ascertain just how the accident occurred. As the stage was ascending a hill it is not probable that it was the result of a runaway. It is said that the driver was addicted to liquor and came near meeting an accident from that cause a few days before, and the impression is that he was in a similar condition Sunday evening, and hence the fatal disaster.

In Their New Quarters.
The Riverside Studio has been removed from the old gallery on the corner of Virginia and 1st streets to the new and commodious quarters in the Smith building, where F. P. Dann is prepared to do first-class work in short order. While not thoroughly arranged in ship-shape form, as yet, Mr. Dann expects to have things in perfect order in a few days. Patrons are assured of the finest work from this date.

Attention I. O. O. F.
The officers and members of Truckee Lodge No. 14, Reno Lodge No. 19, and Reno Encampment No. 5, are requested to assemble at Truckee Lodge Hall Tuesday, May 30, at 9 A. M. for the purpose of taking part in the Memorial Day exercises. All sojourning brothers are cordially invited to participate.

Through the Northern Counties.
William McC. Gotwaldt will leave on his wheel this morning for a tour through Modoc, Lassen and other Northern California counties. Mr. Gotwaldt will represent the NEVADA STATE JOURNAL both as correspondent and business agent. He is empowered to solicit subscriptions, job work, etc., and to collect and receipt for the same. The gentleman is an experienced journalist, a fine descriptive writer, and his communications will prove interesting and profitable reading matter to the people of the section he will visit. The JOURNAL bespeaks for him a kindly reception by its northern neighbors.

Oratorical Contest.
A very large audience filled the University gymnasium last night to hear the forensic contest between the junior and senior classes. The various addresses were able and instructive, indicative of thorough preparation. The speakers were Miss Lucy Grimes, J. B. Jones and Gustav Sielaff of the junior class; T. J. Lawrence, Miss Aimee Sherman and W. C. Lamb of the graduating class. The prize was awarded to Miss Aimee Sherman. Gustav Sielaff's able talk on "Expansion" received honorable mention.

The Relay Race.
Advice from Carson state that the Carson boys are in active training and give promise of greater speed than any team that has ever gone into training in that city. Encouraging reports also come from Susanville so that the public may feel certain that when the three teams line up for the relay race on the 4th of June, the best men of Carson, Susanville and Reno are representing the several towns and that it will be a race from start to finish. No effort will be spared to make the day an interesting one.

A SPLENDID ADDRESS.
Chancellor McLean of Nebraska is Eloquent.
AN APPRECIATIVE AUDIENCE.

Grand Army Veterans Present—
Music by Episcopal Choir—
The Sermon in Full.
Last Sunday an immense congregation honored the presence of Chancellor McLean of the University of Nebraska by their presence in the gymnasium where the baccalaureate sermon was delivered. Early in the morning the people began filing up University Hill, all eager to secure good seats that they might enjoy to the fullest extent the treat tendered them by Dr. Stubbs in securing the Chancellor to preach a farewell sermon to the graduating classes.
A detachment of non-commissioned cadet-officers from the Sophomore class escorted the Grand Army veterans to the hall. Closely following them was the graduating classes in classic caps and gowns indicative of academic rank. Then came the sweet voiced choir of the Episcopal Church, resplendent in their mortar boards and white surplices. These were seated in the front rows, which had been reserved for them.
Contrary to the usual thing on such occasions all the people came early and by the time Dr. Stubbs arose to deliver the prayer the large hall was quite full. Kipling's beautiful "Recessional" was sung by the choir, and then the Chancellor was introduced. After paying a pretty compliment to our honored Dr. Stubbs, he proceeded directly to his sermon which follows:
Ezekiel xlii. 30: "And I sought for a man."
John xix 5: "Behold the man!"
The poet Young soliloquizes upon the extremes that are met in man:
"How poor, how rich, how abject, how august,
How complicated, how wonderful is man!"
An heir of glory! A frail child of dust!
Helpless immortal! Insect infinite!
A worm, a god!—I tremble at myself,
And in myself am lost. At home a stranger,
Thought wanders up and down, surprised,
aghast,
And wondering at her own. How reason reels!
O, what a miracle to man is man!"
Our very bodies are symbolic of our nature. We stand with our feet on the earth and are of the earth earthly. Of all animals we alone are upright; our heads touch the stars, and we are of the heavenly. Between our feet and our head are our hands, with which we may grovel in the earthly or reach out to grasp the heavenly. Since such extremes meet in us it becomes any man in reasoning concerning us to be reverential. The disbeliever may well with respect consider the subject of religion from the very fact that it claims to deal with man upon his earthward and upon his heavenward side. Indeed it is a presumption in favor of religion that it sees all sides and attempts a reconciliation of all. Skeptics and believers all agree that religion must make men, and one that does not make men is not likely to make saints. Of the two relations of religion, one to the here and the other to the hereafter, the first is at hand and can be tested. We shall treat of this side to-day.
OUR TOPIC IS CHRISTIANITY AS THE GOSPEL OF MANHOOD.
1. A gospel of manhood is demanded and confirmed by the nature of man as shown in common aspirations. As generally represented, the Hebrew prophets were preachers of righteousness. They were equally poets of patriotism. Ezekiel, at the opening of the sixth century before Christ represents as the highest purpose of the Almighty in a national crisis the search for a man: "And I sought for a man among them, that should make up the hedge, and stand in the gap before me for the land, that I should not destroy it." And there comes Jehovah's sad refrain, as in certain other periods of human history, "But I found none." Jeremiah, another of Israel's greatest prophets, represents Jehovah with the same ideal of manhood as the demand of his heart and of the times. The Lord proclaims, "Run ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and know, and seek in the broad places thereof, if you can find a man, if there be any that executeth judgment, that seeketh the truth, and I will pardon it." In the midway of Jewish history, as at its beginning when Father Abraham eloquently pleaded with the Lord to save Sodom and the Lord said, "I will not destroy it for ten's sake," manhood is a saving social power, as well as the highest personal ideal. Though the fact has been slighted, the Hebrew drama vies with the Greek epic in presenting as the hero of creation, man.
Athens furnishes a companion place to Jerusalem. It is mid-day upon the streets of Athens. A homely man flashes a lighted lantern into the face of each passer-by. We have his famous answer as he was asked, "Diogenes, what seekest thou?" "I seek a man." The answer is not merely "I seek an honest man", as is commonly reported. It is a sad commentary on our race and age that we should limit the answer of the Greek by inserting "honest." "I seek a man" shows that the aspiration for manhood is common to Greek and Jew alike.
In these days of child-study, as in the days of the Psalmist, it may be said to the Lord, "Out of the mouths of babes and sucklings hast Thou ordained strength." The testimony of children may be wise and unbiased. The old story of the boys who were asking one another what they were to be, is in point. One like his father was to be a merchant, another a carpenter, another a professor. The brightest boy simply answered, revealing how primary is the aspiration for manhood, "I am going to be a man." The untutored, greathearted adult may be one of nature's evidences as to what is elemental in man. At Williams College there was an unlettered Irish ashman who rose above the prejudices of denominational bitterness when he testified of the famous pious astronomer and professor, Albert Hopkins, "There goes a man as is a man." The universal presence of the aspiration for manhood in different ages of history and types of man does not demand more extended proof. Whence shall a man gain satisfaction for these aspirations of human nature? Will the young man who is at times stirred by these aspirations turn to the great religions of the world other than Christianity?

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., NEW YORK.

2. He will find that Christianity is the gospel of manhood as COMPARED WITH OTHER RELIGIONS.
We have time but to select certain typical religions that may be sufficient to give us a just basis of comparison and to answer for all. From the first, mankind has unconsciously made every insight into the truth of things a rule of conduct. An early type of religion is the Fetichism of Africa. The truth of the regularity of the periods of the moon is discovered. Religious feasts are set by these changes. A stick is of special service, but later, when things go wrong, the stick is beaten. The petty petulance and pitiable superstitions of Fetichism have been outgrown and will not be the religion to which our truth seeker can turn, though he must respect it as indicative of a crude relating of man to the universe.
It has become somewhat fashionable to turn to the religions of the Orient. We would scarce expect in Buddhism, in which life is considered as an evil to be endured, to find anything likely to foster manhood. We are happily surprised, however, to find a repose developed that may be a basis of manhood. But it is a manhood totally unfit to the western world, with its aggressiveness and with continents to conquer. The total loss of the leadership of civilization by the Buddhist mind and people show that it is but an early and partial phase. The Anglo-Saxon and the future cannot turn backward to it for their gospel. It is pathetic to find that even in India Brahmanism despite the attempted advance of Buddhism maintained itself in the worship of the Brahmins. Manhood, positive manhood, reasserted itself, and some kind of hero-worship was set up. But we cannot tolerate caste in the land of freedom, and may not find a basis for a religion in a hero-worship. In China Confucianism with its accompanying worship of ancestors is sage. If we must worship men let us worship our fathers and mothers, those glorified by sacrifices for us and often by separation from us. While this would be an amiable gospel to preach to affectionate sons and daughters, it would not be an effective one. The generations would go backward instead of forward. Progress would come to a standstill and civilization would be stationary, as it has been in China through the centuries.
In ancient Greece we have the religion of the physical beautiful. Its worship embodied in statuary like that of the Apollo Belvidere still touches us. After the first glow of enthusiasm, when one stands before the Apollo Belvidere in the Vatican he discovers in the midst of the physical beauty and the traces of intellect in that perfect figure of young manhood, traces in lip and eye of voluptuousness. The history of the downfall of Greece shows that we may turn hither for a gospel of sensuous art, but not for a gospel of an enduring and spiritual manhood. Our modern civilization is so largely aggressive, like the old Roman, that we may hope to find our gospel for a conquering manhood there where the very word for man, vir, meant strength. But alas, it is a gospel for an age of militarism with Mars for its god, with cruelty as its attendant. The religion of Rome culminated in the elevation to divine honors of the emperor. At last we have a god in human form—but a god of power and not of purity. In the words of George Henry Lewes, we have found "in the history of religions that the ideal of human nature more and more usurps the province first assigned to the supernatural powers. The gods, always exaggerations of human power and passions, became gradually personifications of what was most admirable and lovable in human nature, till in Christianity emerged the avowed ideal man." Confessedly the old artists gave us the head—not of the historic Christ, but of the artist's conception of an ideal man. The young man has found no ideal broad enough or historically successful enough to afford him the gospel unless he has found it in the culmination of the

THE POET'S SONG.

A bird of richest song flew
And piped his carol full of cheer,
And long he winged his way about,
But few would wait his song to hear.
With sorrow, in his lonely nest,
He hid his sweet song in his breast.

But some had heard that song of joy,
It came and soothed the pangs of pain,
Gave hope where doubt rose to destroy;
Despairing souls tried once again,
It lifted hearts all tempest tossed—
That song, though stilled, was never lost.

A poet, no one knew him then,
Sang out his carol full of cheer,
Of hope and faith and love for men,
But few would wait his song to hear.
The poet? He is dead! But yet
The songs he sang no hearts forget.

—George Birdseye in Boston Globe.

Medical Students Provided a surprising Array of Presents For It.

"When I was a medical student in the University of Pennsylvania," said the doctor, "the boys celebrated an interesting event in the domestic life of one of the professors in a unique way. The news that the favorite professor was a happy father reached the students on Thursday morning, and that afternoon and evening there were consultations held all over the university buildings, and sundry dimes and quarters were collected by two or three of the students, who constituted a sort of finance committee. Every Friday morning the professor gave a lecture to the students in the amphitheater. The subject for the lecture that week was 'The Relation of the Sympathetic Nervous System to the Nerve Centers of the Brain,' and half an hour before the time set for the lecture every man in the class, which numbered about 350, was in his place waiting for the fun to begin and glancing now and then toward the three long operating tables in the center of the room.

"Promptly at 10 o'clock the door opened and the favorite professor entered the amphitheater. He carefully closed the door behind him, then with a self conscious clearing of his throat turned toward the class. At the first glance his jaw fell, while every one of the 350 students in the seats above began to yell at the top of his lungs. Spread out upon the three long operating tables were about 150 baby's toys and furnishings of every kind and description. There were rattles by the dozen, Noah's arks, dolls of all sizes, a toy cooking stove, a baby carriage, an embroidered flannel petticoat, a nursing bottle lying in a graduated glass, a pair of little blue kid shoes and other things too numerous to mention. After the first shock of surprise and embarrassment, the professor was game. He thanked us, in a speech peppered with five syllabled words, for our thoughtfulness in thus providing for the future needs of his offspring, but he observed, after a careful examination of the various instruments of infantile delight spread out before him, that we had forgotten one thing, a bottle of paregoric. Then he yawned in a way suggestive of midnight vigils and turned his attention to 'The Relation of the Sympathetic Nervous System to the Nerve Centers of the Brain.'

"But he was not allowed to proceed beyond the first sentence or two. His attention was drawn to the blackboard, where some student of artistic tendencies had drawn an elaborately decorated design in red, white and blue chalk, 'Is Marriage a Failure?' The poor professor, seeing that there was no possibility of a serious lecture that morning, entertained us for about ten minutes on the text posted on the blackboard; then, after inviting us all to visit the new-comer in the immediate future, he marched off to the music of 350 voices singing, 'Go to Sleep, My Little Pickaninny' and 'Daddy Wouldn't Buy Me a Bowwow'." —New York Sun

Coal Used by Romans.

It is believed by some historians that coal was used by the Romans on the continent and by the Britons on the island before the arrival of Caesar. As early as 1284 Henry III granted a license to dig coal near Newcastle, but a few years later the use of coal was forbidden in London, the smoke being deemed prejudicial to public health.

In 1806 the London gentry petitioned the king against its use, declaring that, in spite of his royal order, certain malicious persons persisted in burning it. Coals began to be brought from Newcastle to London in 1831, during the reign of Richard II. By the year 1400 coal was commonly burned in London as a fuel, though 300 years later, in the reign of Charles I, its use was far from being general throughout England.

Anthracite coal, which, except the diamond, is the purest form of carbon known, was first used by a Connecticut blacksmith named Gore, in 1768, and as a domestic fuel by Judge Jesse Fell of Wilkesbarre, Pa., in 1808.
